Preface

It was in 1929, during the course of compilation of a catalogue of a private collection of materials of interest to students of Mughal period of Indian History, belonging to the late Mr. Vicaji D.B. Taraporewala, that the idea of compiling an annotated bibliography, covering source-materials for the study of that period, suggested itself to me. Next year, when, in consequence of the award of Sir P.M. Mehta Research Scholarship, I undertook a research assignment on a subject pertaining to this period, a compilation such as this, as a preliminary to that assignment, became necessary. In that year, when I embarked upon this work, little did I dream of the vicissitudes of fortune that it will have to pass through and the number of years that will be required to complete it. I am grateful to Him that at long last, it has been possible for me to see at least a part of the work, in the shape of this volume, duly completed.

While I am so glad that this part of the work is now ready for the use of scholars, it is with some hesitation that I lay it before the public. Because, despite the utmost endeavour, I am conscious that imperfections have remained. I feel, however, that the work, despite its weaknesses, will prove so useful that I will not be justified in holding it back until it was perfected. I am reminded of these famous lines of poet Alexander Pope in support of my decision:

Whoever thinks a faultless piece to see,
Thinks what ne'er was, nor is, nor e'er shall be.

I will be grateful if scholars will point out the relevant deficiencies, so that the opportunity to eliminate them can be availed of in the second edition, if and when it is called for.

In this work, an attempt has been made to list, as exhaustively as possible, the sources for the study of India during the period that the country was governed by the Mughals. The sources included in this work are in various languages and pertain to various aspects of life—political, economic, social, cultural and others. No language is excluded, no aspect of life is overlooked. The idea is to make the survey as comprehensive and exhaustive as possible, and any source, which, even indirectly is concerned with, or, throws any light on the life and labour of the period covered is included.

When the compilation was taken up, it seemed a project of reasonable compass. But as the work progressed, it grew and it grew. Ultimately, it was decided, therefore, that this first volume be confined only to works as were in manuscripts, and that a separate volume to follow should cover published materials. The present volume, therefore, is restricted primarily to such sources as are contemporary or original and in manuscripts, and does not include, except incidentally, secondary sources or printed compilations of later period which are derived from or based on original or contemporary sources. Such secondary sources comprising printed books and periodical contributions are set apart for another and a separate volume.

In determining the scope of the present volume, each item, before it was included, was checked as to its relevance to the study of the subject—Mughals in India. In the process of such selection, liberal interpretation has been preferred. For instance, in the case of any particular author, besides those works having a direct bearing on the study of the period, his other works, not so directly concerned, have been included also. Similarly, literary works and works in other fields as may illuminate the study of various types and aspects of human endeavour during the period have been noticed also. In respect of works in Sanskrit and allied languages, the selection is not exhaustive. Apart from works produced under the patronage of contemporary rulers, a broad choice has been favoured to reflect the cultural renaissance in Sanskrit that took place during the period, and to give an idea of the nature and extent of the court patronage that was extended to learning and literature, at the time.

The inclusion of works in different languages in this volume gave rise to the problem of transliteration, and it proved baffling. Adoption of generally accepted standard systems of transliteration in respect of each language seemed a way out. But, in actual practice, it was noticed that, sometime, in one and the same item, one and the same word appeared in confusingly different garbs. Moreover, the difficulties of the press in assuring adequate provision of a wide variety of diacritical marks and special types could not be overlooked also. The pedantic approach was given up, therefore, and a popular approach was adopted by means of an ad hoc phonetic transliteration. The defects of this compromise may call for critical comments, very naturally, and indulgence is craved for, therefore, in this regard.

The arrangement of the items is according to authors, and in the case of anonymous works, which are dealt with in a separate section, according to titles. An exhaustive title index has been provided, followed by an index of subjects. A separate index of names of authors, with possible alternative keywords, presented a difficult task, and, as the work already had taken over twelve years in the press, it was thought discrete to omit it. In the body of the text itself, however, this deficiency to some extent is neutralised, inasmuch as, such alternative names, as were necessary in some cases, have been provided for, even at the risk of the same item being repeated elsewhere in the work. This volume has been in the press for over twelve years, and necessarily, provision had to be made, therefore, for addenda and corrigenda to bring the contents of the bibliography and the references contained therein, uptodate.

In each item, besides the author's full name and the title of the work, with such known alternatives as are there, some of the following details, or all of them, are given: (i) a brief idea as to the contents of the work; (ii) the relevance of the work for the study of the period; (iii) available published versions of the text, and extracts or translations therefrom, if any; (iv) relevant sources where discussion or elucidation of such works has been attempted; and, lastly, (v) the libraries or the private collections of the world wherein the MSS thereof are available, indicated mostly by means of references to standard catalogues of MSS of such libraries or collections. These references are given in an abbreviated form, and a key to the abbreviations used in this behalf has been provided for, just before the commencement of the text-part. The object in giving all these details is to provide complete information as is possible in respect of each item, particularly, as to its relevance, wherefrom it is available, and the incidental references thereto as may enable its evaluation as a source of study.

The attempt, in short, is a very comprehensive one, so that the work may prove useful from different points of view. Suggestions, however, to add to its utility, as already stated above, will be received very gratefully. The compilation claims no originality. Its prime aim is to provide a comprehensive and a ready bibliographic aid to students of this period. Any help received towards the achievement of this object will be appreciated.

During the compilation of this work, while I visited and worked in some of the libraries in India and abroad, and took the opportunity to make personal references, my main reliance has been on the catalogues, printed or otherwise, of the MSS in the different libraries of the world. Personal collections have also been availed of. And I take this opportunity to record my sense of gratitude to the various librarians, to the scholarly compilers of the different catalogues, and the individuals who so graciously permitted access to their personal collections. As it is difficult for me to give here, in extenso, the long list of these names, I content myself by mentioning certain selected names in each of these categories for the specially valuable help I received from them.

In the first category, I wish to thank Mr. J.D. Pearson, the Librarian of the School of Oriental and African Studies, London, for the facilities he was good enough to provide to me while I worked in his library, in 1953. In the second category, I must express my thankfulness to Mr. C.A. Storey, and Mr. W. Ivanow. The Persian Literature—a Bio-Bibliographical Survey of the first, and the valuable Catalogues of the second, not only gave me much of the data for this work, but provided suggestions as well for the lay-out and the format of this compilation. In the third category, I wish to pay my tribute to the memory of late Mr. Vicaji D.B. Taraporewala. It was his invitation to me to prepare a catalogue of his private collection that marked the beginning of this work, and, therefore, his absence from the scene at the end of it is so poignant to me.

To Professor N.A. Nadvi, the veteran scholar, to Dr. M.I. Momin, the Lecturer in the Department of Persian, University of Bombay and to Professor A.G. Shaikh, Head of the Department of Persian, K.C. College, Bombay, I am indebted for the suggestions they made from time to time as and when they had occasion to refer to this compilation while it was in the making. My grateful thanks are due also to Mr. B. Anderson, the Reader in the Department of Library Science, and the Deputy Librarian in this university, for bringing to my notice very many references which otherwise would have escaped my attention, and to Mrs. M.A. Sardesai, a colleague on the staff of this library, for the valuable assistance she gave me in the compilation of the index, sacrificing her leisure hours.

Last but not the least, I can hardly thank the University of Bombay, in adequate terms, for the valuable library it placed at my command. This facilitated the compilation of the work so much, and as a token of my gratitude, therefore, I deem it proper to dedicate this volume to my alma mater.

Introduction

In 1929, in consequence of the award of Sir P.M. Mehta Research Scholarship in the University of Bombay, I undertook a research project on a subject of Mughal history. As a preliminary to that work, a compilation of a bibliography of source materials for the study of that period was deemed necessary, and I have been at this work since then. In 1967, one volume confined only to works as were available in unpublished form was published by me and its distribution was entrusted to Messrs Asia Publishing House. Within a very short time this edition was out of print. In 1985, Messrs Mansell Publishing Ltd (a subsidiary of H.W. Wilson Co. of London and New York) brought out a reprint edition in London. The present attempt is to update this compilation and bring it out as a supplementary volume.

The scope and contents of this work are described fully in the Preface to volume I which is reproduced in this work for ease of reference. Once again I take this opportunity to record my sense of gratitude to the individuals and institutions who so graciously permitted me access to their collections and facilitated my work.

IHRC* (1958), xxiv/2, pp. 208–14.

East India Company Records : During its eventful career from 1600 to 1858, records covering the E.I.Co's commercial and political activities accumulated, and, in course of time, a large part of these records, duly processed; were preserved at various centres. Valuable information can be gleaned from them, pertaining to India about the conditions of life and labour and the company's political role in the affairs of this country during the Mughal period. Below is an indication of their location and distribution.

- (i) India Office Records: Press lists of these records have been summarised and indication of contents given in A Guide to the India Office Records, 1600–1858, by William Foster (London 1919). Part of the records have been published in the form of Letter Books, Calendars, Court Minutes, etc., in a series of volumes, details whereof can be had from this work.
- (ii) Records in British Libraries : Manuscript materials for the study of seventeenth century India preserved in British Libraries are indicated in: Sources for the History of British India in the Seventeenth Century by Shafaat Ahmad Khan, London 1926.
- (iii) Madras Records : Indication of contents can be had from: Handbook to the Madras Records by J. Talboys Wheeler, Madras 1861; Reports on the Madras Records by H. Dodwell, Madras 1916; A Guide to the Records preserved in the Madras Record Office, Madras 1936. Parts of the Records have been published by H. Dodwell: Calendar of Madras Despatches, 3 vols., (covering the period 1740 to 1765) Madras 1917–30. For other publications, see Ghose (S.) Archives in India, Calcutta 1963, pp. 311–14.
- (iv) Bombay Records: See Thomas Candy's Descriptive Report, printed in 1864 and Handbook of the Bombay Govt. Records by A.F. Kindersley, 1921. Also there is a Press List of Ancient Documents, 1646–1760, preserved in the Bombay Record Office. Besides the Factory and Residency Records, there are the records of the Alienation Office, Poona, comprising original Maratha records of Peshwa's administration taken over by the British Govt. at the time of the conquest in 1817. Selections from this Peshwa Daftar as also many other records have been published, see Ghose, ibid., pp. 314–19.
- (v) Bengal Records: The Pre-Mutiny Records of the Central Record Office of the Govt. of West Bengal do not contain materials of data earlier than 1756. Same is the case with many other regional record offices.
- (vi) National Archives of India: The Imperial Record Dept. of the Govt. of India was created in 1891 and after independence it was renamed in 1947. Here, again, the Pre-Mutiny Records of the E.I.Co., except in two cases, are not of earlier dates. The two exceptions are Foreign Dept. and Home Dept. which commence from 1596 and 1680 respectively, but there are also some stray papers. See Handbook to the Records of the Govt. of India in the Imperial Record Dept., 1748 to 1859, pp. 1–3, and Govt. Archives of South Asia, ed. by D.A. Low, J.C. Illic and M.D. Wainwright, Cambridge 1969, pp. 31–232.

For further details, cf. Tamil Nadu Archives. Diamond Jubilee Celebrations, Commemoration Vol. 1970; Extracts from the Report of V.S. Bendrey on the reorganisation of the Alienation Office Records and the Poona Peshwa Daftar (for official use only), 1949; Calendar of Oriental Records (U.P. Stat. Records Series) Allahabad 1955; D.A. Low and others, ibid., pp. 233–339.

(Farāmīn wa ruqa'āt): Collection of firmāns of Mughal Emperors, official letters, etc.

MSS : SJHP iii 925–6.

French Records : These contain materials exchanged between Mughal officials and the French East India Co.

MSS : In the case of Société de l'histoire de l'Inde Française ad Pondicherry. See Cat. des MSS. des anciennes archives de l'Inde Française ed. by Gaudart, 8 vols, Paris 1922. See also Hatakhar (V.G.): French Records relating to the history of the Marathas, Bombay 1978; Foster (W.): A Guide to the India Office Records, 1600–1858.

Index of Titles

(Note: All references are to the pages. Where a work has been referred to incidentally only, and not dealt with primarily, the entries are in italics. Works having common titles are individualised by the indication of their authors. Titles of published works are distinguished by an asterisk, and the surnames of their authors have been added immediately after the title and the entries are in italics. Such titles as are doubtful are enclosed within parentheses.)
